

Abortion Politics

Politicians are adept at cloaking sinister activities with aplomb and much circumstance, totally devoid of reality. The reality of each abortion-on-demand in America is the physical death of an Unborn American. “Choice” would rather we did not see this reality because it might revive our collective consciences and move us to reinstate those unalienable, but apparently unwritten, rights that they once enjoyed and that we at the moment, take for granted. Tragic images of humanity violently destroyed, out of millions of comparable images, should follow you into the voting booth. If the candidates of your choice would not have stood for the interest of these most defenseless, why do you think the candidates have any real interest in anything but their own election? After all, isn’t “pro-choice” really about self-indulgence at the expense of innocent life? All the lofty platitudes espoused by politicians are rendered meaningless when corrupted by the very base nature of their “pro-choice” stand. Faithful Catholics are rigidly opposed to the liberal pro-choice position in all its manifestations. Particularly abhorrent are so-called Catholic politicians who are reconciled with all pro-choice legislation and publicly champion its causes. Separation of church and state for them means separation of the faith they claim from the legislation politically expedient to their real beliefs. Pro-choice Massachusetts harbors many politically expedient (predominately Democrats) who religiously are un-anchored to the faith they claim. Moral reality mandates that those of bedrock faith always propose or support honorable legislation. Those whose faith is muddled or non-existent gravitate from any such legislation. Moral reality also mandates that the electorate support only candidates who see clearly that America’s moral obligation to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, begins in the womb. Those who easily usurp this right of American passage, conception to birth, will have no qualms of one day usurping the remaining American passage, birth to natural death. It will become un-natural, at their dictate and legislated. Termination-on-demand for born Americans is a reality threat just as abortion-on-demand became real for Unborn Americans. The operative word of “choice” has been and continues to be “un-wanted”. So be very careful about your vote or it may literally come back to haunt you one day. A nation never survives immoral politics, it disintegrates from within, and history is testament to this reality.
