

1776-Independence Day-1973

What should we celebrate today? Should we celebrate? Is the country a true model of freedom for all? When we declared our independence from foreign dominance and gave our lives in defense of that freedom, a new and noble experiment emerged upon God's earth. Noble it was and gained the admiration of all. We were "endowed" by the Creator with certain inalienable rights, life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Lofty words, and more or less understood by all, as a reflection of our framers moral beliefs in a new constitution of laws for our nation's survival. In the pursuit of perfecting these inalienable rights, amendments were enacted and became law. Innocence was presumed in all cases and innocent life was sacrosanct. Nowhere in the constitution does it state otherwise.

I, with much sadness, often recall more moral times in which I could proudly say that America was truly a bastion of freedom. Our constitution reflected Gods essence, but ominously in 1973 a weakened America succumbed to liberal pressure and embraced evil. Roe v Wade decision declared that innocent life was not sacrosanct and the death knell of the nation sounded. Few heard it and most seemed oblivious to the sound, and the implications of that decision. Now, half the voting public defends partial birth abortion, the consummate evil, vehemently. The same half of the voting public also vehemently defends civil unions, another crime against morality. With the country and congress so divided, can it much longer survive? The original framers never imagined that freedom would enable such moral corruption. Regrettably it has with accompanying decay and ultimately death. Epitaphs will be appropriate and some thought should be given in advance. Perhaps you have some others, more appropriate?
